“If [abortion] is the one service you offer, that’s the service you are going to try to sell.”

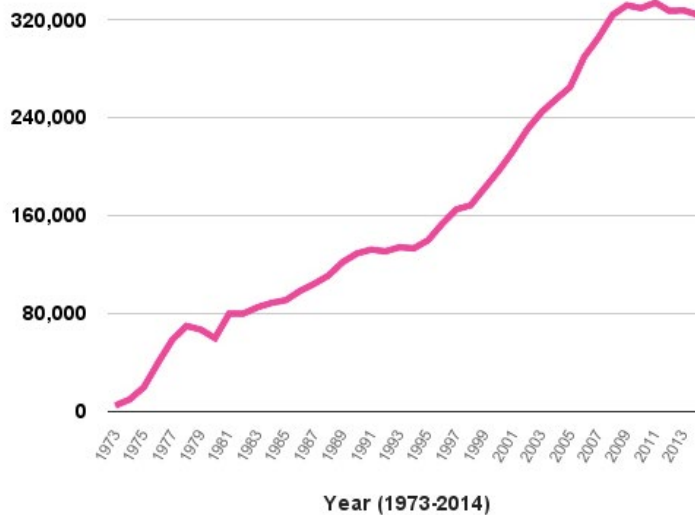

- Sue Thayer, former Planned Parenthood manager, Storm Lake, IA

When it comes to Planned Parenthood’s “options counseling” – talking about the options of keeping the baby and getting prenatal care, getting help with adoption, or having an abortion – former managers confirmed what Live Action investigators had discovered: the abortion chain herds women toward its largest revenue generator – abortion. Other options are rarely, if ever, talked about. As Sue Thayer, a former manager of 17 years, told Live Action, “If that’s the one service you offer, that’s the service you are going to try to sell.”

Thayer described the options counseling process as very rushed: “At Planned Parenthood, it’s pretty much, you know, gotta get this done, gotta get this figured out, got another client waiting.

“You feel for the woman, but you’re also under this intense scrutiny by upper management – this pressure to keep going, keep going, you know, get the clients in and out.”
